The content on ScienceNordic is protected by copyright. That means you need our permission to use content from ScienceNordic, e.g. for corporate photocopying and the use of ScienceNordic content in academic course packs and other classroom contexts.

It is permissible to make direct quotes from ScienceNordic articles. The context, number and length of the quotes will determine whether permission is required. It is never acceptable to selectively quote from articles in a manner that changes their meaning, to take quotes out of context or to combine quotes to create a sentence. It may also be considered an infringement if a large percentage of the publication consists of quotes from ScienceNordic articles. When you quote ScienceNordic articles, we encourage you to link to the original article on ScienceNordic. If in doubt, please feel free to contact us.

You are permitted to create your own summaries and to use ScienceNordic headlines with links back to the articles on ScienceNordic.com.

Headlines and summaries are also available as feeds that you can add to your own website.

Links

We encourage links from other sites to ScienceNordic. You may link to any page, section or article on ScienceNordic. Just use the URL in the address bar when you view the article on our site.

However, if the page you're linking to opens within a frame, the ScienceNordic content may look like it is part of your web site. This type of display of ScienceNordic content is not permissible, so please be careful when linking within frames.

Permission is required to mirror an article or to post it on your site.

Please contact us at editor@sciencenordic.com [3] if you have any questions about copyright or require permission to reuse content from ScienceNordic.
